Making Space for Students in PLCs

By Kathy Collier

September 16, 2022

Heading into the 22/23 school year, Quilcene staff spent a great deal of time developing Professional Learning Communities (PLCs). Each of our PLCs is a group of educators who meet regularly (often times on Wednesday mornings) to share expertise, analyze student work, plan instruction, and collaborate to improve teaching skills and the academic performance of students.

This month's article, from Edutopia, talks about the importance of effective collaboration that includes student participation, often times in the form of student feedback.

Academic Recognition

Each week we'll be celebrating student academic success in middle and high school by naming two students of the week. This week, the awards go out to Landon Avery for turning in an amazing written reflection on a STEM activity and James Miller for being "on top" of his safety exams in Agriculture Mechanics. Congratulations!
