Teaching & Learning

If It Matters to Kids, It Matters

When children feel loved, cared for, and valued, they are better able to process information and voice their opinions.

By Sarah Wysocki, Edutopia

Throughout today (the first day back from Spring Break), I've been able to visit many classes. During these visits, I've intentionally told each group that, while our staff very much enjoyed Spring Break with families and friends, we also greatly missed each of our students, and are really excited to see everyone back together.

This week's article speaks about the importance of our students knowing that we genuinely care about them, and also gives some specific strategies teachers can use to ensure students feel both connected and supported.

For our staff— I'm really excited to further visit classrooms and see how our students are being supported holistically as they've returned!

Academic Recognition

Congratulations to this week's Students of the Week, Kaetyn Riley and Kole Eldridge. Kaetyn was nominated by her 8th grade math teacher for showing tremendous maturity in ensuring her work is always done on time and at a very high level. Kole was nominated for his work in his 11th grade literature class in strengthening class conversations through using critical thinking skills. Keep up the good work, Kaetyn and Kole!
